Dr. Daniel Domingues is an Assistant Professor of African History at the University of Missouri, Columbia, and co-manager of Voyages: The Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade Database. He graduated with a B.A. in History from the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 2004 and earned his M.A. and Ph.D. from Emory University in Atlanta, GA in 2009 and 2011 respectively. Dr. Domingues’ research focuses on the history of the slave trade from West Central Africa, developed with funding from several institutions, including the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, and the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation. His publications are available in peer-reviewed journals in English and Portuguese, such as the Journal of African History and Revista Afro-Ásia. Dr. Domingues regularly teaches survey courses on the history of early and modern Africa as well as upper level courses such as “African History through the Digital Medium” and “Modern Africa in Film and Literature.”

Dr. Majee is an Assistant Professor of Public Health and Health Sciences. His primary research focus is on community leadership development in the context of empowering and engaging local residents of resource-limited communities in improving their health and well-being. He also has interest in healthy early childhood nutrition among low-income rural families. His dissertation at the University of Wisconsin used in-depth interviews to examine how worker-owned healthcare cooperatives create social capital that can benefit members of the cooperative and their community. Upon graduating from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, Dr. Majee joined MU Extension as a Community Development Specialist and County Program Director. He currently leads a project that seeks to compare community leadership and youth engagement between rural Missouri and rural South Africa.

Sponsored by African Interdisciplinary Studies Hub, Division of Applied Social Sciences, Bond Life Sciences Center’s the Life Science & Society Program (LSSP)